Wastewater Treatment Requirements

(25 Pa Code Chapter 95)

Wastewater Treatment Requirements

On November 7, 2010, the Environmental Quality Board (Board) published a notice of public hearings and comment period on the proposed Wastewater Treatment Requirements rulemaking (see 39 Pa.B. 6467). Due to a publishing error that listed an incorrect e-mail address for the Board in the Notice of Proposed Rulemaking at 39 Pa.B. 6467, a Correction Notice for the rulemaking was published on November 14, 2009, at 39 Pa.B. 6547, where the Board advertised that the comment period for the proposal was extended by 7 days. The public comment period officially closed on February 12, 2010. In addition, four public hearings were held as follows: December 14, 2009, in Cranberry Township, Butler County; December 15, 2009, in Ebensburg, Cambria County; December 16, 2009, in Williamsport, Lycoming County; and December 18, 2009, in Allentown, Lehigh County.

SUMMARY OF COMMENTS FOR CHAPTER 95

DRILLING-RELATED COMMENTS

Drilling-related comments are those comments that seemed to be targeted at the natural gas industry and in some cases, more specifically the drilling and hydraulic fracturing of gas wells. Since this rulemaking is primarily to establish wastewater treatment requirements for wastewaters containing total dissolved solids (TDS), many of the comments in this category were not really applicable to the rule. They are listed here to demonstrate that much of the public comment focused on regulating the natural gas industry.

Comment: 1 Set health-based standards for all contaminants that may be found in wastewater gas drilling including arsenic, benzene, radium, magnesium, volatile organic compounds, and radioactivity.

Response: The Commonwealth currently has health-based standards in place for arsenic, benzene, radium exposure to radiation and volatile organic compounds (VOCs). The human health standards are found in our drinking water maximum contaminant levels (MCLs) and the water quality standards for our surface waters are found in Chapters 93 and 16. These standards are based on sound science and protect the public health and our streams. In addition, the final rulemaking includes effluent limitations for additional parameters that are found in gas drilling wastewater such as barium and strontium.

Comment: 2 Do not allow the use of brine for dust control on dirt roads, since many of these roads are used for recreational purposes.

Response: This rulemaking addresses effluent standards for the treatment of wastewaters containing TDS. This comment is not applicable to this rulemaking.

Comment: 3 The fracking industry uses poisonous cocktails of contaminants. Our groundwater and streams need to be protected from these chemicals.

Response: One of the primary goals of this final rule is to protect Pennsylvania's streams and drinking water sources from TDS-containing wastewater by implementing new effluent standards. DEP's position is that the final rule approach is a conservative and proactive one, which will serve to preserve and protect this state's environmental assets. Our current well construction standards are designed to protect groundwater resources from any contamination that could result from drilling and fracturing wells and we have recently taken steps through new regulations to make those standards even more protective.

Comment: 4 The proposed standards are not stringent enough to protect our streams and additional steps need to be taken by PADEP now to prevent further degradation of the State's waterways and water resources.

Response: The Commonwealth currently has standards in place for arsenic, benzene, radium exposure to radiation and VOCs. The human health standards are found in our drinking water MCLs and the water quality standards for our surface waters are found in Chapters 93 and 16. These standards are based on sound science and protect the public health and our streams. In addition, the final rulemaking includes effluent limitations for additional parameters that are found in gas drilling wastewater such as barium and strontium.

Comment: 5 The high pressure hydraulic fracturing technology invented by Halliburton [now located in Dubai] has been used in TX, WY, western PA, and CO with disastrous consequences. There have been fires, explosions, and other "accidents" in all of these other places around the country, making many farms, ranches, and homesteads uninhabitable.

Response: The Department recognizes the importance for oversight of natural gas drilling operations, and is currently taking the necessary steps to acquire field inspectors to monitor and ensure compliance. However, this rulemaking addresses effluent standards for the treatment of wastewaters containing TDS. This comment is not applicable to this rulemaking.

Comment: 6 We need to make sure especially that our very best waterways, those designated as Exceptional Value or High Quality, as well as all sources of our public and private drinking water, are fully protected. We should be ever vigilant to threats to the quality of our waters. We also should learn from past mistakes: we are still paying to clean up acid mine drainage and other water pollution left as a legacy of lax regulation of the coal industry in times past. With the expansion of Marcellus gas drilling in Pennsylvania, we need to have strong protective measures in place before another disaster like the 2009 Dunkard Creek incident occurs.

Response: The final rule establishes treatment standards for wastewater that must be met, which are protective of the uses of our receiving streams, prior to any discharge to surface water. High quality and exceptional value waters have additional protections, and are addressed in Chapter 93. The Department agrees with the commenter's suggestion that strong protective measures are needed to protect the quality of our waters. The final rule establishes treatment standards for this wastewater that must be met, which are protective of the uses of our receiving streams, prior to any discharge to surface water, as suggested.

Comment: 7 The commonwealth and its citizens have a right to know and the drilling companies have an obligation to tell us what they are putting into the ground when they perform hydrofrack activities regardless of whether the chemicals are corporate secrets.

Response: The Department knows what additives are used in the fracturing process, and has sampled flow back waters to determine the relative quantities of these constituents. We have posted a list of these chemicals on our web site at:

Comment: 8 Demand safe and biodegradable fracking chemicals in PA. Many people in Dimrock have already had their wells contaminated.

Response: In order to minimize the impact of drilling and fracking operations on Pennsylvania's water resources, the final rule promotes the reuse of fracturing fluids. However, this rulemaking addresses effluent standards for the treatment of wastewaters containing TDS and does not cover the drilling and fracking process. This comment is not applicable to this rulemaking. In addition, our current well construction standards are designed to protect groundwater resources from any contamination that could result from drilling and fracturing wells and we have recently taken steps through new regulations to make those standards even more protective.

Comment: 9 Require "cradle-to-grave" tracking of wastewater from drilling sites from generation through treatment and disposal.

Response: This type of tracking is already required under the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act and the Department's Residual Waste Regulations at 25 Pa Code §§ 287 – 299.

Comment: 10 Create regulations to oversee the reuse of drilling wastewater. There is little oversight over the reuse of drilling wastewater and whether in fact this is a waste disposal method as opposed to closed loop water recycling.

Response: In order to minimize the impact of drilling and fracking operations on Pennsylvania's water resources, the final rule promotes the reuse of fracturing fluids. However, this rulemaking addresses effluent standards for the treatment of wastewaters containing TDS and does not cover the drilling and fracking process. This comment is not applicable to this rulemaking.

Comment: 11 The proposed new regulations on TDS have already had a very positive result. The gas drilling industry has quickly moved to develop wastewater management strategies that rely on recycling. The gas exploration industry is very well funded and technically based. They have the means, as they already have proven, to respond to the challenges of their own wastewater. Put to the task, this industry is developing strategies that other industries can follow. These new technologies will translate into good, home grown jobs. Please hold the line on the proposed new standards. They are not perfect, but they are a very good start.

Response: The Department agrees with this comment.

Comment: 12 No frackwater treated or untreated should go into our streams.

Response: The final rule establishes treatment standards for this wastewater that must be met, which are protective of the uses of our receiving streams, prior to any discharge to surface water. Wastewater that has been treated to these standards will prevent water quality problems in our rivers and streams.

Comment: 13 Severely limit the number of wells in one area. Drilling the number of wells that they are drilling significantly dilutes the environmental quality of these pristine lands. Once damaged, it may take decades or centuries for them to return to their former state, if ever.

Response: This rulemaking addresses effluent standards for the treatment of wastewaters containing TDS and does not cover the drilling and fracking process. This comment is not applicable to this rulemaking.

Comment: 14 Use less toxic “fracing” chemicals by implementing best practices identified by researchers at Texas A&M University’s Global Petroleum Research Institute, as a start.

Response: This rulemaking addresses effluent standards for the treatment of wastewaters containing TDS and does not cover the drilling and fracking process. This comment is not applicable to this rulemaking.

Comment: 16 Mandate closed-loop systems for managing wastewater, as well as steel tanks to contain the concentrated leftovers.

Response: The final rule promotes the reuse of fracturing fluids as suggested. The operation of the drilling and fracking process or of the wastewater management process is not covered by this rulemaking. This rulemaking only addresses effluent standards for the discharge of treated wastewaters. This comment is not applicable to this rulemaking.

Comment: 17 These drillers need to be strictly regulated and they need to be taxed. This is no fledgling industry. With the good people of Pennsylvania already taxed to the gills, it makes no sense to have these well-organized predatory energy companies lobbying themselves into a free ride.

Comment: 18 We are concerned that that the projected discharges from drilling operations are greatly overstated and the ability to reuse flow back water has been underestimated.

Response: This final rule takes a proactive approach to controlling TDS from the natural gas industry. The Marcellus Shale play is indeed in its infancy. The industry does not yet know answers to most of the questions about the play and in particular, about the impacts the play could have on the waters of this Commonwealth. The Department's aim is to ensure that future growth of this industry is considered in the rules and regulations it puts in place now.

Comment: 23 Refocus the regulation to apply to the oil and gas industry only.

Response: The oil and gas industry is not the only industry that discharges dissolved solids. Based on Stakeholder comments received during an exhaustive public participation process, the final rulemaking adopts a combination of recommended approaches for addressing new and increased loadings of TDS. This combination of approaches includes an industrial sector-based regulation along with a watershed-based analysis. The sector-based piece focuses on the natural gas industry.

Comment: 24 The targets of this regulation appear to be one-time dischargers, such as the hydrofacking industry.

Response: Based on Stakeholder comments received during an exhaustive public participation process, the final rulemaking adopts a combination of recommended approaches for addressing these larger loadings of TDS. This combination of approaches includes an industrial sector-based regulation along with a watershed-based analysis. The sector-based piece focuses on the natural gas industry.

Comment: 27 Sewage treatment plants are not equipped to effectively treat constituents of frac water and flowback water. Therefore, the gas drilling industry should be required to pretreat flowback water to remove all chemicals that conventional sewage treatment plants are not designed to treat before such water is released to such plants.

Response: Gas drilling wastewater that is not recycled must be treated at a DEP-authorized Centralized Wastewater Treatment (CWT) facility to the standards specified in the final rule. Only after such treatment may the wastewater be allowed to be sent to a sewage treatment plant.

Comment: 32 After four decades of demonstrable improvement in water quality, the US Army Corps of Engineer's data shows that conditions are reversing on Pennsylvania's rivers. It is becoming apparent that the assimilative capacity of some rivers to receive total dissolved solids, if not already exceeded, is close to being exceeded, and simply cannot sustain the additional loading projected as a result of natural gas exploration activities. In the last two years, evidence of degradation, based on elevated specific conductivity readings recorded at water quality monitors located on the Monongahela River at Elizabeth, PA, the Casselman River at Markelton, PA, and the Conemaugh Dam, in addition to the recent Dunkard Creek aquatic kill, demonstrates that high TDS wastewaters threaten to undermine historical water quality improvements, posing a genuine and extreme threat to regional water quality.

Response: The Department agrees, and these facts support the need for this regulation.

MINING-RELATED COMMENTS

Mining-related comments are those comments that were from the mining industry, or were in support of the mining industry. This rulemaking establishes treatment requirements for wastewaters containing TDS; many believed that it could affect mining operations. The rule has been revised to respond to these comments.

Comment: 33 The lack of regulation and insufficient bonding in the early years of coal mining have caused major environmental damage, requiring years and much money to clean up. Over 3,000 miles of streams are still impaired from that irresponsible behavior. We need to prevent this from happening in the future by regulating discharges of high TDS wastewater.

Response: The Department agrees, and this final rule takes a proactive approach to controlling TDS from both the natural gas industry and other new and expanding mass loadings of TDS.

Comment: 34 The proposed standards are not based on sound science, are costly, burdensome, unworkable and therefore, threaten the vitality of the mining industry. Placing obstacles such as this does nothing to retain the jobs we have.

Response: The Department disagrees that these regulations threaten the vitality of the mining industry. From the inception of the rule, the intent of the Department was to exempt existing discharges, and insignificant discharges of TDS, from the effluent standards aimed at controlling the new, larger source of TDS. The provisions specifically allow for continued discharges of TDS wastewaters at currently authorized loads and are designed to lessen the affects on existing and small discharges of TDS in Pennsylvania through the exemption and variance provisions. This new regulation is not expected to impact reclamation activities at abandoned mines that are operated by local watershed groups.

Comment: 35 Current discharges from existing waste coal sites that are conducted in an environmentally sound manner should continue to be regulated under existing requirements. We believe that the proposed regulations could prevent remining and reclamation of waste coal sites.

Response: It is not the intention to include surface coal remining operations with pre-existing discharges covered by Ch. 87, Subch. F or Ch. 88 Subch. G in this rulemaking. The preamble to the proposed rulemaking stated: “It is not intended to include discharges from treatment facilities for abandoned mine discharges (AMD), which existed on April 1, 2009, where new treatment facilities are installed or existing facilities are modified. This is important to assure that efforts to treat AMD by third parties (watershed groups, trustees or the government) are not thwarted by imposing limits on these projects with overwhelming positive environmental benefits. Surface coal remining operations with pre-existing discharges authorized under Chapter 87 Subchapter F or Chapter 88 Subchapter G are specifically exempt in § 95.10(a) of the final rulemaking.

Comment: 36 Revise 95.10(b)(5) to exempt discharges into mine pools what are permitted under Chapters 87, 88, 89, or 90.

Response: These discharges raise concerns related to the quality of any discharge to a mine pool. Mine pools are waters of the Commonwealth under the Clean Stream Law, and are regulated pursuant to, among other regulations, §§ 91.51 and 91.52.

HEALTH BASED COMMENTS

These were comments that related to the effects on public health that could be impacted by the rulemaking. Most of the comments related to the protection of drinking water. Most relate to fracking chemicals, but others related to the brominated disinfection byproducts that occurred in the Monongahela River.

Comment: 37 Maintain the proposed treatment standards of 500 mg/L for TDS, and 250 mg/L for sulfates and chlorides.

Response: These treatment standards have been maintained for wastewater resulting from fracturing, production, field exploration, drilling, or completion of natural gas wells.

Comment: 38 Since public water suppliers cannot treat this type of polluted water, the wastewater should be treated to a degree that would be protective of drinking water prior to discharge.

Response: There are technologies that are capable of meeting these standards as noted in the preamble. Gas drilling wastewater that is not recycled must be treated at a DEP-authorized Centralized Wastewater Treatment (CWT) facility to the standards specified in the final rule. A discharge of this gas drilling wastewater will only be authorized from one of these CWT facilities.

Comment: 39 Dilution is not the solution to pollution. There are no currently operating facilities capable of removing TDS. Until these facilities are built and operational, we stand a great risk of no longer being able to provide clean, safe drinking water for citizens of the Commonwealth.

Response: DEP's activities during this whole regulation process have confirmed that technology for treating exceptionally high TDS wastewater from gas well drilling operations is available. Though many of these technology vendors do not yet have operational treatment facilities in Pennsylvania, at least six have either full-scale pilot facilities or facilities running in other states. Additionally, technologies are currently under development that will treat this wastewater without using as large amounts of energy or emitting a high amount of air pollutants. DEP believes enactment of this final rule will provide a great degree of certainty to propel the industry in this direction. Specifically, this will accelerate the development of more efficient technologies, zero discharge technologies, and spur pollution prevention through increased wastewater reuse.

Comment: 40 Studies have shown that disinfection byproducts resulting from chemical reactions between disinfectants and organic materials present health risks to humans. The worst of these is brominated water, which has been shown to cause bladder cancer in humans. At present, the Monongahela River, with high concentrations of TDS presents higher levels of several of these contaminants.

Response: The Department agrees and cites one of these studies as a reference.

Comment: 41 Many rural citizens rely on private wells for drinking water, and must have a clean and reliable drinking water supply.

Response: Private wells will be protected through proper construction of both the private well and oil and gas drilling wells.

Comment: 42 TMDLs based on Q7-10 puts water suppliers at risk.

Response: In order for a TMDL to be needed, a stream segment already needs to be impaired, which puts water suppliers at risk. This rulemaking has been crafted to avoid creating impairments and scenarios where TMDLs would be needed, and therefore protects water supplies.

ENVIRONMENTALLY BASED COMMENTS

These were comments that related to the effects on the environment that could be impacted by the rulemaking. Many related to harmful effects from an inadequately regulated mining industry. Others are concerned about the quality of Pennsylvania’s streams, and with aquatic life protection.

Comment: 43 The Dunkard Creek tragedy is a good indicator of the consequences of high TDS wastewater discharges into our fresh water streams. The discharge of high TDS wastewater into the stream completely damaged the biological community in the stream by allowing the growth of toxic algae, which can only survive in salt water. The algae was responsible for the destruction of 43 miles of stream, including 161 species of fish, 14 species of freshwater mussels, and other aquatic creatures such as salamanders by dissolving exposed cells, including gills.

Response: The Department agrees, and this incident was considered in the analysis and the need for the regulation.

Comment: 44 I am strongly in support of protecting Pennsylvania’s valuable water resources from destruction due to irresponsible drilling and coal extraction. As a conservationist and fisherman I find issues with Marcellus Shale drilling very disturbing. As you well know, the process of “hydraulic fracturing” presents serious problems related to environmental health and regulation. It uses large quantities of water drawn from streams or aquifers, this water is turned into a earthen slurry laced with fracturing chemicals which can poison and make turbid the water source, and it has been proposed that drilling wastewater be processed at sewage treatment plants which are not equipped to return the water to a chemical / particle free state. Furthermore, Pennsylvania's DEP has been slashed by budgetary constraints at a time when they should be increasing the monitoring process.

Response: The Department requires all oil and gas drilling wastewater to be treated at a centralized waste treatment facility prior to being discharged to a publicly owned treatment works (POTW). Although the effluent is not chemical / particle free, the centralized waste treatment facility must comply with standards set forth in this Chapter before it can be sent to a POTW.

Comment: 45 Provide particularly strong protection of our trout waters. Increase the involvement of the PFBC in waterways regulations and enforcement. Increase the penalties for violations of the Water Regulations and for all environmental violations.

Response: The Department works in cooperation with the PFBC where appropriate. The Department's enforcement strategy allows the issuance of penalties to those entities not in compliance with the provisions of this rulemaking.

Comment: 46 Studies show that watersheds in Pennsylvania (e.g. the Monongahela River) are already being adversely impacted by TDS discharges due to inadequately filtered wastewater discharges from gas drilling operations.

Response: The Department recognizes the concerns relating to wastewater discharges high in TDS and as such has promulgated this rulemaking to establish discharge standards which will be environmentally protective.

Comment: 47 DEP has not shown, by monitoring or sampling data, that water resources are at any sustainable risk from TDS concentrations.

Response: The Department does not agree. Studies described and others cited in the order provide ample basis for this rule.

Comment: 48 Research in 1997 states that TDS over 400 mg/L has a direct negative affect on the diversity of fish populations. Additional research in 2007 confirms this. It is recommended that the TDS standard be lowered to 400 mg/L.

Response: The recommended 400 mg/l standard is an “instream” number that would have to be achieved after mixing and dilution of the discharge with the receiving stream. The 500 mg/l standard for natural gas industry wastewaters is more stringent because it would be applied at the end of the discharge pipe. In addition, the Department has reviewed the relevant data to assure that the current osmotic pressure criterion in the water quality standards regulations continue to provide protection for aquatic life at the point of discharge.

Comment: 49 Watershed analyses conducted by the PA DEP indicate that several rivers are severely limited in their capacity to assimilate new loads of TDS and sulfates - primarily due to acid mine drainage from long-abandoned coal mines--a legacy of Pennsylvania's last energy rush. Increased TDS and sulfate loading would reverse years of hard-won progress by PA DEP in improving water quality in these watersheds.

Response: The Department agrees, and these facts support the rule. The proposed discharge standards of 500 mg/l for TDS and 250 mg/l for chlorides as monthly average will not prevent consumption of further assimilative capacity. Also, these standards are stringent enough not to cause any problems with Potable Water Supply intakes. In addition, the final rule provides protection by limiting the resulting instream concentration using ambient Water Quality Network (WQN) stations and data.

Comment: 50 I suggest that waste waters in need of disposal or treatment be transported to power plants or similar facilities near marine aquatic environments for transfer to marine outfalls. These are more similar chemically to the waste water than our surface freshwaters.

Response: The Department agrees that the assimilative capacity of the ocean is greater than that of a freshwater stream, and the chemistry of sea water is more similar to wastewater generated by the oil and gas industries rather than the chemistry of freshwater streams. The overarching problem lies in the fact that transportation costs to such facilities from sites in Pennsylvania may not be economically viable. The Department believes the standards set forth in this rulemaking adequately address concerns from wastewater discharges with elevated TDS and will be protective of the Commonwealth's waters.

Comment: 51 Elevated TDS has unintended consequences.

Response: The Department agrees with the commenter. Elevated TDS can be toxic to aqueous, freshwater organisms, and can have an adverse affect on the biodiversity of aquatic communities. Moreover, public water systems with intakes on many of the streams where wastewater discharges occur or are projected to occur are not equipped to remove TDS during their treatment processes. Wastewater discharges with high levels of TDS may cause drinking water standards to be exceeded especially in times of low stream flow.

Comment: 52 DEP should continue to perform studies of the TDS spikes and determine what the extents of the levels are, as well as an analysis of the water that enters the state of Pennsylvania.

Response: TDS concentrations are being monitored. Real-time monitors are being installed to allow the detection of high levels of TDS.

Comment: 53 Protect fish and aquatic life by requiring protective effluent standards, considering background quality, and not allowing mixing zones.

Response: The Commonwealth currently has water quality standards in place. The water quality standards for our surface waters are found in Chapters 93 and 16. These standards are based on sound science and protect the public health and our streams. In addition, the final rulemaking includes effluent limitations for additional parameters that are found in gas drilling wastewater such as barium and strontium. Background quality is taken into account in the watershed based approach in the final rulemaking. Discharges will not be allowed to violate water quality standards, which will be implemented by using the background water quality.

Comment: 54 The pH should be between 6.5 and 8.5, as prescribed by EPA.

Response: Effluent standards for pH are contained in Chapter 93, and are not necessary in this rulemaking.

Comment: 55 A Water quality based approach is not a practical way to protect against TDS pollution.

Response: The Department has revised the rulemaking to address TDS discharges from sources other than the oil and gas industry. Due to the different technologies and economics involved, the final rulemaking includes a provision for variances based on water quality.

Comment: 56 Strontium is only a concern when it is present in radioactive form or in a compound with chromium. Replace strontium limits with limits on beta radiation and chromium.

Response: The department already has standards for beta radiation and chromium. No additional standards are required in this Chapter. The limit for strontium is being maintained.

ECONOMICALLY BASED COMMENTS

These were comments that related to the effects on the economy that could be impacted by the rulemaking, whether large-scale or small-scale. There were comments that DEP did not understand the economic impact of the regulation, that small oil and gas producers would be the hardest hit, and that the regulation would discourage investment in Pennsylvania.

Comment: 57 DEP does not fully understand, and has not evaluated, the economic impact this regulation has on industries in PA. The statewide impact will be in the billions of dollars to comply and will put companies of the Commonwealth at a disadvantage with its competitors.

Response: The Department does understand and has evaluated, through the TDS Stakeholders Subcommittee process, that the proposed rule affected a very large cross section of Pennsylvania industries. In order to provide greater clarity to the scope of the regulation, the final rulemaking takes the approach of specifically exempting certain classes of TDS discharges from the application of this rule. This approach is designed to clearly exclude from the scope of this regulation all existing loadings of TDS authorized by the Department prior to the effective date of this regulation, as well as new and expanding TDS sources, which the Department has determined are insignificant from a loading perspective. Further, the Department agrees with the comments that were received pointing out that the proposed rule is a one-size-fits-all approach that may not be appropriate. Different industries have vastly different wastewaters, even in the composition of the TDS. There are many different technologies that would be necessary to treat these different wastewaters, and the costs of treatment to a given standard could create an inequitable economic problem. The Department has addressed this issue and the comments received in this final rule. The approach establishes an effluent standard for sectors other than the natural gas industry at 2,000 mg/l, and allows a variance from this standard under certain conditions specific to the watershed in which the discharge is located. The rule applies only to new and expanding loads of TDS, not existing authorized loads, making it more easily achieved.

Comment: 58 These companies are providing jobs. Do not throw up unattainable rules to discourage investment.

Response: The Department's priority is to enhance environmental protection which will ultimately improve the quality of human life. The Department disagrees that the standards established in this rulemaking are unattainable. While technologies to reduce TDS currently exist these environmental challenges can also present economic opportunity for private industry to develop and invest in new and improved technologies to reduce contaminants in wastewater. This rulemaking creates an opportunity for private industry to enhance efficiency, drive competition and improve productivity. Failing to take the necessary steps to protect the environment will compromise habitats of aquatic organisms, drinking water supplies and quality of life.

Comment: 61 The proposed regulations will limit the availability of commercial treatment of brine. The proposed regulations will essentially eliminate much of the current capacity to take brines to municipal treatment plants for disposal.

Response: The Department does not agree. The final rule will provide regulatory certainty. The Department has met with over 60 manufacturers and vendors of technologies for treating the very high levels of TDS from the natural gas industry, and specifically the Marcellus shale formation. While some of these vendors do not have actual facilities in operation and are seeking to get into the business, at least six manufacturers have either piloted the technology at full scale or have facilities currently operating in other states. Much of the hesitancy on the part of these technology vendors is the uncertainty regarding this rule. The companies are reluctant to move forward without a clear direction in regulation concerning what levels they will need to treat to for TDS. Implementing this regulation will provide certainty to the companies proposing treatment facilities and give a clear guidance on what their facility will need to treat to regarding high TDS wastewaters. In addition, investment companies have indicated that without clear direction they are less willing to provide capital for financing these types of wastewater treatment facilities. One company provided information that their treatment plant, if built and operated, could create approximately 70 to 100 short-term jobs during construction and about 12 permanent jobs during operation of their facility. Finally, these highly-concentrated TDS wastewaters pose a great threat to the biological treatment processes at municipal sewage treatment plants, and the final rule prohibits that without adequate pretreatment facilities.

Comment: 63 Each treatment option leaves a residual waste product which required further disposal adding to the cost of treatment for an issue that has not been identified as a statewide or even prevalent concern. In addition, other environmental concerns associated with TDS reduction, such as energy consumption, air emissions, landfill capacity, and disposal costs have not been addressed.

Response: The Department has reviewed all of the comments received and has determined that a sector-by-sector approach to controlling TDS is appropriate. High-TDS wastewaters from different industries present different treatment challenges. Not all industrial wastewaters containing TDS are consistent. Based on the need for regulation of a rapidly expanding industry which generates wastewaters with extraordinarily high levels of TDS and chlorides, the readily available proven treatment technologies for this wastewater, the low costs associated with treatment, and the overwhelming public comment in favor of a standard for this industry, the proposed regulation has refined its original focus on treatment for oil and gas wastewaters. The final regulation now contains more specific treatment requirements for wastewater generated from all natural gas drilling activities. New technologies are being developed that treat this wastewater without using large amounts of energy or emitting large quantities of air pollutants, and the Department believes that this regulation will continue to move that industry in that direction. In fact, the Department believes that the certainty provided by this rule will accelerate the development of more efficient treatment technologies, zero discharge technologies and also drive conservation and pollution prevention through reuse of the wastewater. This industry will generate residual solids. The Department continues to work with treatment technology providers to develop reusable end products from these materials to reduce waste and costs associated with this treatment.

Comment: 64 Polluted waters impair tourism and the health of citizens. By protecting these waters, the new regulations will help support tourism, which generates more than $28 billion in economic revenues. More than 600,000 Pennsylvanians work in the tourism industry, drawing paychecks totaling $18 billion.

Response: The Department has established discharge standards for TDS, chlorides, barium and strontium in wastewater to ensure the quality of the waters of the Commonwealth is not compromised. These standards will protect our waters, and support tourism.

LEGALLY BASED COMMENTS

These were comments that related to the legal concerns of the rulemaking. For example, some stated that DEP failed to adequately consider statutory elements for rulemaking.

Comment: 65 The Halliburton Loophole is killing animals, and will kill people in the future. A person covered in loophole covered material arrived at a hospital, and the doctors had no means of knowing how to treat the person, due to the trade secret. No industry should have such power over life and death.

Response: The Halliburton Loopholes was established by federal law. Pennsylvania cannot eliminate a loophole created by the federal government.

Comment: 66 Environmental justice communities have been targeted for disposal of toxic wastewater. DELCORA had been permitted to receive, treat, and dispose of toxic wastewater into the Delaware River, even though the sewage treatment plant would not adequately treat the wastewater. Although the permit was rescinded due to community outrage, significant concern exists that it will happen in the future.

Response: DELCORA's permit to receive this wastewater was rescinded at the request of DELCORA. Regardless, all permit applications for treatment of this type of wastewater will be reviewed in accordance with existing Department regulations, and when effective, this final rule. This rule requires adequate pretreatment of the natural gas wastewater to the specified standards.

Comment: 67 No doubt the exhausted fluids need treatment, but simply removing filterable particulates SHOULD NOT be the end of it! For example the raised salinity and acidity MUST be addressed, not to mention the outright toxicity of the Halliburton Mixture AND Radioactivity.

Response: The rulemaking addresses far more than filterable particles. Salinity is addressed in the rulemaking. There are existing water quality standards for acidity and radioactivity. Due to the treatment required to meet the effluent standards in the rulemaking, there will be no toxicity effects from the chemicals used in the fracking process.

Comment: 68 First, I contend that there are many unknowns regarding natural gas drilling wastewater. The Department's own Mr. Starosta admitted this at a recent public meetings along with the fact that there "could be surprises" regarding this wastewater. What is in fracturing water is at issue before it enters the ground. Once this frac water emerges back from the earth, it carries with it heavy concentrations of earthen contaminants which, like many of the known chemical additives in frac water, can and do cause cancer and other harmful illnesses. The flow back water also contains extremely high total dissolved solids and can also be radioactive. I question what other harmful contaminants exist in this water that are not being tested for, or the lack of a test exists. The water that is proposed to be handled and discharged from this facility is a soup of uncertainty.

Response: The Department knows what additives are used in the fracturing process, and has sampled flow back waters to determine the relative quantities of these constituents. We have posed a list of these chemicals on our web site at:

<http://www.dep.state.pa.us/dep/deputate/minres/oilgas/FractListing.pdf>.

Comment: 69 The proposed rulemaking fails to adequately consider statutory elements, including the consideration of water quality management and pollution control in the watershed as a whole and the immediate and long-range economic impact upon the Commonwealth and its citizens.

Response: As stated in the order, this final rulemaking differs from the proposed rulemaking in several important respects. To provide greater clarity to the scope of the regulation, the final rulemaking takes the approach of specifically exempting certain classes of TDS discharges from the application of this rule. In addition, based on Stakeholder comments received, the final rulemaking adopts a combination of recommended approaches for addressing these larger loadings of TDS. This combination of approaches includes an industrial sector-based regulation along with a watershed-based analysis. Since there are numerous industrial categories and subcategories that include TDS as a pollutant of concern in their wastewater discharges, the watershed-based approach for all industrial sectors other than oil and gas establishes an effluent standard, but also provide a variance option for these discharges. Further, the combination of these approaches does indeed consider the long-term economic impacts.

Comment: 70 Watershed-based alternatives to the proposed standards are ill conceived, a misallocation of limited DEP staff and resources, and contrary to the legal and regulatory regime for regulating point sources of pollution under the Clean Water Act and Clean Streams Law.

Response: The Department disagrees. The Department has revised the rulemaking to address TDS discharges from sources other than the oil and gas industry. Due to the different technologies and economics involved, the final rulemaking includes a provision for variances based on water quality.

Comment: 71 Definitions are overbroad and vague, and do not identify who is covered by the regulation and who is not.

Response: In order to provide greater clarity to the scope of the regulation, the final rulemaking takes the approach of specifically exempting certain classes of TDS discharges from the application of this rule. This approach is designed to clearly exclude from the scope of this regulation all existing loadings of TDS authorized by the Department prior to the effective date of this regulation, as well as new and expanding TDS sources, which the Department has determined are insignificant from a loading perspective.

Comment: 72 Chapter 95 should not replace Effluent Limitation Guidelines or Best Professional Judgement in the writing of permits.

Response: The final rule does not do either. Where ELGs exist, they are used to set effluent limitations. BPJ is used by Department staff as a general rule in writing permits. The treatment requirements in § 95.10 will be implemented in accordance with the framework established by 25 Pa. Code § 92.2a.

Comment: 73 DEP has not adequately considered non-water quality environmental impact.

Response: The Department disagrees. Technologies are currently under development that will treat this wastewater without using large amounts of energy or emitting a high amount of air pollutants. DEP believes enactment of this final rule will provide a great degree of certainty to propel the industry in this direction. Specifically, this will accelerate the development of more efficient technologies, zero discharge technologies, and spur pollution prevention through increased wastewater reuse.

Comment: 74 DEP authority under state law is unclear or not clearly stated.

Response: The Department disagrees. The final-form rulemaking is adopted under the authority of sections 5 and 402 of the Clean Streams Law (35 P.S. §§ 691.5 and 691.402), which provide for the adoption of regulations implementing the purposes and requirements of the Clean Streams Law and for the regulation of activities which create a danger of pollution to the waters of the Commonwealth, and Section 1920-A of the Administrative Code of 1929 (71 P.S. § 510-20), which authorizes the Board to promulgate rules and regulations necessary to implement the provisions of the Clean Streams Law. In addition, the Clean Streams Law authorizes the Department to adopt regulations necessary for the protection of the purity of Commonwealth waters, (§ 691.304) and to protect domestic water supplies (§ 691.501).

TECHNICALLY BASED COMMENTS

These were comments that related to the technical aspects of the proposed rulemaking. Some were concerned with the perceived limited technical justification of the rulemaking, and others state that the regulation does not offer a solution that addresses the problem.

Comment: 75 There are two sources of wastewater from Marcellus gas wells – flowback water from the fracking process and produced water. Flowback water can contain many contaminants. Frac and flowback fluids can enter streams and rivers intentionally (legally by permit) or accidentally. The result can be a danger to health for all organisms - including humans. It can also make the water unfit for industrial use. According to the United States Geological Survey fact sheet on Marcellus Shale, for gas to flow out of the shale, nearly all of the water injected into the well during the hydrofrac treatment must be recovered and disposed of. In addition to the problem of dealing with large bulk volumes of liquid waste, contaminants in the water may complicate wastewater treatment. Whereas the percentage of chemical additives in a typical hydrofrac fluid is commonly less than 0.5 percent by volume, the quantity of fluid used in these hydrofracs is so large that the additives in a three million gallon hydrofrac job, for example, would result in about 15,000 gallons of chemicals in the waste.

Response: We agree that large quantities of water are needed for hydrofrac operations. We realize the potential for accident spill in such operations. Our permitting process requires all applicants for industrial activities which have the potential for accidental release of pollutorial material to surface or ground water to prepare a Preparedness, Prevention, and Contingency (PPC) plan. This plan contains detailed steps to minimize incidents that cause pollution as well as steps to be taken when the incident occurs. It should also be noted that we have developed a list of parameters of concern for wastewater discharges from fracing operations. This list was developed by sampling, testing and analyzing of the wastewater discharges from fracing operations at various facilities. Our permit contains the monitoring and reporting requirements for those parameters of concern. In addition, our current well construction standards are designed to protect groundwater resources from any contamination that could result from drilling and fracturing wells and we have recently taken steps through new regulations to make those standards even more protective.

Comment: 76 None of us wants to put any one Pennsylvanian in jeopardy of damaging his or her health. However, lets see some real evidence that water used in fracturing new gas wells is doing, or is likely to do, any harm before imposing new costs on those doing the drilling that are likely to result in them reducing their exploration eight thousand feet under our state's land. The brine from the flow-back of the wells is being labeled as toxic but it exists in our ground and water naturally. It is not being introduced by the use of water for fracturing. The same is true of many of the minerals that are part of the flow-back water from the wells. Of the water introduced into the ground for fracturing, only two or three percent are chemicals introduced by the drilling companies. These are proprietary to each company and are not disclosed to any of those crying wolf, so how do they know we all are being put in any danger?

Perhaps it makes sense to legislate disclosure of what is being introduced into the “frac” water before deciding what to label as toxic and what to do about them.

Response: We are generally aware of the wastewater characteristics for discharges from fracing operations. You may note that we have developed a list of parameters of concern for wastewater discharges from fracing operations. This list was developed by sampling, testing and analyzing of the wastewater discharges from fracing operations at various facilities. Our permit contains the monitoring and reporting requirements for those parameters of concern.

Comment: 77 DEP should aggressively seek out all scientific knowledge concerning contents of all wastewater and have standards that would allow these waters to be treated in the safest possible way.

Response: We have taken steps to increase our knowledge of the issues dealing with wastewater generated by gas exploration operations and treatment technologies to safely treat the wastewater to desired level.

Comment: 78 This proposed rulemaking has offered no scientific data or justification for imposing such severe limits.

Response: This comment either fails to understand or is ignoring important evidence. The background and purpose contained in the public notice clearly establishes the scientific justification for the proposed rulemaking. The Department’s analyses of watersheds across the Commonwealth were conducted using rigorous statistical methods. Where the Department’s analyses of WQN data showed the potential for water quality criteria violations, detailed studies were conducted in those watersheds. A glaring omission by those who question the scientific need for the rule is any mention of the environmental disaster in Dunkard Creek that wiped out 26 miles of stream. The problem was high TDS concentrations leading to colonization and growth of golden algae, as well as osmotic pressure exceeding the regulatory numeric criterion. Dunkard Creek is a good example of what can happen if TDS is not controlled, and the loss of this important public resource was an environmental tragedy, documented by the loss of aquatic life, including endangered mussels. The proposed rulemaking eliminates the potential future impacts that may be caused by the gas exploration activities. The Department bears the responsibility to protect our resources and the proposed rulemaking is necessary to protect our water resources from any potential damage that may be caused by the gas exploration activities.

Comment: 79 The proposed rulemaking is predicated on very limited sampling in the Monongahela River between October and December 2008 when river levels were at historical lows and there were high dissolved solids concentrations entering the Commonwealth from West Virginia.

Response: This comment is not correct. Neither the proposed rule nor the final rule is predicated exclusively on the conditions that are occurring in the Monongahela watershed. In the Monongahela, TDS levels have already exceeded water quality criteria. This means that allocations of TDS loads must be made for all dischargers in the watershed, to bring the river back to compliance. The Department will be listing the Monongahela as impaired on its upcoming impaired waters list as required by the federal Clean Water Act. Both the proposed rule was intended, and the final rule is intended to prevent other watersheds from becoming impaired, like the Monongahela. The assessment process by the Department in the Beaver River watershed is the same as occurred in the Monongahela. The potential for a TDS problem has been identified from WQN data, and the Department is responding by collecting grab samples and deploying conductivity probes. It takes time to collect the data, but when an adequate number of samples become available the Department will not simply rely upon a WQN frequency analysis, as suggested, but must consider the entire weight of evidence. Similar assessments of WQN data were made for the West and North Branches of the Susquehanna River, the Clarion River and Moshannon Creek, which are discussed above.

Comment: 80 The fact that the proposed rule focuses on a statewide limit, as opposed to being imposed on a watershed specific basis like other wastewater discharge requirements, will not result in an efficient use of resources.

Response: The Department has revised its approach in the final rule to include a watershed-by-watershed analysis.

Comment: 81 The proposed rulemaking does not explain the problem nor does it offer a solution that addresses the problem.

Response: Item D (Background and Purpose) of the public notice clearly explains the problem and the proposed rulemaking is the solution to the problem. In short, the problem is, as identified in various Department studies, adverse effects of discharges of TDS, sulfates and chloride have on the aquatic communities in the receiving streams. The proposed rulemaking addresses this by imposing treatment requirements new and expanding mass loadings of TDS.

Comment: 82 A TDS limit is not necessary or appropriate to address concerns relating to the potential presence of metals and organic pollutants in discharges.

Response: We are aware that TDS limit is not necessary to address concerns relating to the potential presence of metals and organic pollutants in discharges. In addition to TDS, the rulemaking includes limits for chlorides, sulfates, barium and strontium.

Comment: 83 The health of aquatic organisms is protected by the current osmotic pressure water quality standard.

Response: The Department agrees to the extent that the effects of individual discharges on receiving streams are evaluated at the point of discharge; however, TDS is a conservative parameter, meaning that TDS is not subject to fate during transport in the water column. This means that a pound of TDS discharged in the headwaters of a watershed is still a pound of TDS at the mouth of the watershed. Osmotic pressure is not an effective measure of water quality from cumulative loadings of TDS from multiple discharges that can cause violations of water quality criteria at design conditions.

Comment: 84 The number of NPDES permit applications should not be used as a basis for further regulation since these applications are speculative in nature.

Response: The Department must treat these applications as authentic, each requesting a part of any available assimilative capacity, unless they are formally withdrawn.

Comment: 85 The criteria for TDS, sulfates & chlorides are based on secondary maximum contaminant levels and are not a risk to human health.

Response: While TDS and sulfate concentrations manifest as secondary contaminants at the levels established as MCLs, they are toxic to both humans and aquatic life at higher concentrations. For example, sulfates begin to exhibit a laxative effect on humans at concentrations between 500 mg/L and 750 mg/L, while the secondary MCL is 250 mg/L.

ADMINISTRATIVELY BASED COMMENTS

These were comments that related to administrative aspects of the rulemaking, especially as it relates to the scope of the regulation. Many comments stated that the regulation should be implemented immediately, some wanted elimination of the threshold for large sources, others wanted whole effluent toxicity requirements, and others wanted regulation of the reuse of fracking wastewater.

Comment: 86 Implement these proposed standards immediately. Do not postpone the effective date until 2011.

Response: The effective date has been deleted and the final rule will become effective upon publication in the PA Bulletin.

Comment: 87 The limits should be applicable to all treatment plants. New sources should be covered immediately, and existing sources of large TDS discharges should be covered through the NPDES renewal process.

Response: From the inception of the rule, the intent of the Department was to exempt existing discharges, and insignificant discharges, from the effluent standards aimed at controlling the new, larger source of TDS. The provisions specifically allow for continued discharges of TDS wastewaters at current loads and are designed to lessen the affects on existing and small discharges of TDS in Pennsylvania through the exemption and variance provisions.

Comment: 88 The standards for TDS should be stated as daily maximum, not a monthly Response: The language will continue to say monthly average. Most discharges will not exceed the monthly maximum on a daily basis and adequate instream dilution will be available to prevent exceeding the water quality standard.

Comment: 89 There should be a minimum requirement that all discharges not cause background in-stream concentrations of TDS to rise above 133% of background levels (the Delaware River Basin Commission standard).

Response: DEP will not be adopting the 133% requirement of the DRBC, but instream water quality will be protected through the use of the watershed based permitting approach in the final rulemaking, which takes background quality into account. Discharges will not be allowed to violate water quality standards.

Comment: 90 DEP's proposed definition of large TDS sources is good. Do not change it. The proposed regulation is a good means to prevent impairment and regulation of TDS prior to having to utilize a TMDL process.

Response: Applicability requirements have been changed under 95.10(a), (b), and (c).

Comment: 91 The 2,000 mg/L threshold concentration should be stated as daily maximum, not a monthly average.

Response: The threshold concentration has been removed. The final regulation will apply to all new or expanding mass loadings of TDS.

Comment: 93 Due to the highly varying toxicity of both TDS discharges and especially Marcellus wastewater, Whole Effluent Toxicity (WET) testing should be required utilizing both an acute and chronic toxicity standard.

Response: If TDS are controlled to less than 500 mg/L, no WETT is necessary.

Comment: 94 The proposed amendment is an excellent start to protecting the waters of the Commonwealth, however, an opportunity to further strengthen the proposed rule is by eliminating the applicability thresholds.

Response: From the inception of the rule, the intent of the Department was to exempt existing discharges, and insignificant discharges, from the effluent standards aimed at controlling the new, larger source of TDS. The provisions specifically allow for continued discharges of TDS wastewaters at current loads and are designed to lessen the affects on existing and small discharges of TDS in Pennsylvania through the exemption and variance provisions.

Comment: 95 While I support the effort to update water discharge standards for industry, I can't help but feel that this attempt to update "allowable contaminants" is participating in a tedious cycle of "catch up" on the part of agencies responsible for maintaining standards of water quality. If you can determine a legitimate standard for water quality that is directly compatible with the existing streams and waterways in which the treated discharge is introduced, that data would then be an obvious criterion for the quality of discharged water that was expected by your agency, and ongoing updates would be the exception rather than the rule. In short, while I am pleased that you are at least considering improvements to your system, I feel they fall far short of addressing the ongoing problem of water, marine, and human safety.

Response: The Clean Streams Law is in effect. Further regulation of TDS is provided in this rule to protect the waterways of the commonwealth.

Comment: 96 Do not amend Chapter 95. The proposed amendments include the establishment of new LESS stringent effluent standards for the new sources of wastewaters containing high Total Dissolved Solids concentrations.

Response: The Department does not agree with this comment. Chapter 95 is being amended to include standards for the treatment of wastewaters containing TDS.

Comment: 98 Develop list of toxic fracking compound components that are so difficult to purify or treat that they should be banned from use in fracking fluid. This list must also be made public on a website.

Response: The Department knows what additives are used in the fracturing process, and has sampled flow back waters to determine the relative quantities of these constituents. We have posted a list of these chemicals on our web site at:

Comment: 100 Consideration should be given for the implementation of seasonal or flow-based TDS limits, with the intent of restricting TDS mass discharges during periods of low flow.

Response: Real-time Management is discussed in detail in the preamble. Support for this position relies on a certain rationale that does not reflect real-world considerations or good science. This method of managing flows on a real-time basis presents many problems, most notably compliance with federal and state regulatory water quality standards.

Comment: 101 Consideration should be given to the implementation of a TDS trading system, which could effectively address legacy TDS contributors in return for higher discharge limits for municipalities and industry.

Response: Support for this position relies on a certain rationale that does not reflect real-world considerations or good science. This method of managing flows presents many problems, most notably compliance with federal and state regulatory water quality standards. Systems wishing for higher discharge limits may be eligible for a variance under 95.10(d).

Comment: 102 Simplify permitting of TDS treatment facilities. The regulatory control of the treatment can be accomplished by the insertion of appropriate language into any facilities NPDES permit.

Comment: 103 Minimize impacts to existing operating facilities, including POTWs which receive trucked in wastewaters and septage, which often contains in excess of 2,000 mg/L.

Response: From the inception of the rule, the intent of the Department was to exempt existing discharges, and insignificant discharges, from the effluent standards aimed at controlling the new, larger source of TDS. The provisions specifically allow for continued discharges of TDS wastewaters at current loads and are designed to lessen the affects on existing and small discharges of TDS in Pennsylvania through the exemption and variance provisions.

Comment: 104 Provide flexibility to regulators. Each region has professional staffs that are best positioned to know the needs of the ecosystems that they protect. Failure to provide flexibility will slow the pace of environmental improvement, hinder economic growth/recovery and potentially shift valuable resources to litigation.

Response: The Department agrees and the proposed rule will be sector based. Systems not covered under 95.10(a) or (b) following 95.10(c) may request a variance following conditions under 95.10(d).

Comment: 105 The time frame of January 1, 2011 is an unrealistic goal for the implementation of this proposed rulemaking. The time required for design, permitting, ordering, construction, and final testing will not be possible sooner than 30-36 months.

Response: The regulation only applies to new and existing facilities that will not be able to discharge until they are constructed; therefore, this contention is without merit.

Comment: 106 Clarify applicability of the proposed regulation, more specifically identifying discharges that are not included.

Response: The Department agrees. In order to provide greater clarity to the scope of the regulation, the final rulemaking takes the approach of specifically exempting certain classes of TDS discharges from the application of this rule. This approach is designed to clearly exclude from the scope of this regulation all existing loadings of TDS authorized by the Department prior to the effective date of this regulation, as well as new expanding TDS sources, which the Department has determined are insignificant from the loading perspective. The applicability requirements can be found at 95.10(a), 95.10(b), and 95.10(c). Specifically exempt discharges are under 95.10(a).

Comment: 107 Input was sought after the fact concerning economic impact from various entities that may be affected by the rule.

Response: The Department disagrees. The regulations are being implemented to protect the environment from further economic hardships in the future related to clean up and sustainability of the water supply due to high TDS concentrations.

Comment: 109 Sampling done by the Department and posted on the SWRO web site used an inappropriate testing method, drying the samples at 105 Deg, rather than at 180, which is required by EPA and USGS test methods, which could result in higher TDS concentrations due to the inclusion of water in the results.

Response: This is not correct. Both methods are correct. In fact, the method used by the Department may be “more correct” in measuring “total” dissolved solids, as it measures both the organic and inorganic components of the TDS.

Comment: 110 Clarify that effluent from a plant utilizing surface water should not have to be higher quality than the surface water being used.

Response: A wastewater treatment plant is not treating surface water; the treatment plant is treating wastewater or frackwater that has a discharge with effluent regulatory standards to meet.

If a water treatment plant is treating surface water it also has regulatory standards that have to be met for potable drinking water.

Comment: 115 Consider changing 95.10(c)(6)(i) to say that POTW must ensure that the waste is treated to the same extent that it would be if discharged directly from a CWT by having the wastewaters pretreated to levels consistent with the guidelines found in 40 CFR 437.33 or 437.44

Comment: 119 The largest contributor to the waterways of PA is nonpoint source road salts! Instead of burdening wastewater treatment plants with costly removal of TDS, the DEP should be looking at alternatives to road salt.

Response: Road salt is used during bad weather and is not consistent year to year. There are alternatives to common road salt depending on state budget. PA DEP does not manage state budget and the salt we choose. This rulemaking addresses effluent standards for the treatment of wastewaters containing TDS. Regulating TDS from wastewater plants is a more stable and consistent means of regulating TDS.

Comment: 121 Since changes are inevitable, you should republish as proposed or advanced notice of final rulemaking.

Response: The Department will not be publishing an advanced notice of final rule making. Issuing an advanced notice of final rulemaking is discretionary and, given the extensive public outreach for this regulation, including the cooperative work by the Department with the TDS Subcommittee, and the fact that the final regulation incorporates many of the recommendations of the stakeholders, the Department does not believe an advanced notice of final rulemaking is appropriate, but rather would only lead to unnecessary delay.

Comment: 122 Adopt the lowest possible effluent standards.

Response: The Commonwealth currently has standards in place for arsenic, benzene, radium exposure to radiation and VOCs. The water quality standards for our surface waters are found in Chapters 93 and 16. These standards are based on sound science and protect the public health and our streams. In addition, the final rulemaking includes effluent limitations for additional parameters that are found in gas drilling wastewater such as barium and strontium.

Comment: 123 It is unclear how the reg would apply to facilities in basins with commissions that have their own standards for TDS.

Response: The facilities shall follow the TDS standards of this regulation unless federal regulations have already established Effluent Limitation Guidelines for the discharger. The treatment requirements in § 95.10 will be implemented in accordance with the framework established in 25 Pa. Code § 92.2a. If basin commissions have more stringent standards, those standards will be applied.

Comment: 126 Stop all new gas drilling operations until there standards are set.

Response: Stopping all new gas drilling operations is not a feasible option. Existing and new wells have permit conditions to follow. Regulating new drilling operations to the TDS standards will be protective of our waterways.

Comment: 127 Go much further to control release of TDS or any other pollutants. Require dischargers to pay for sewage plant upgrades immediately rather than over a period of time. It will take years until these plants can upgrade and accommodate the amount of frackwater they create. Most do not have the money to begin with and the taxpayers will have to pay for the bonds to provide for the upgrades.

Response: We understand your concerns. Sewage plant upgrades can not be placed solely on TDS dischargers as these upgrades may be needed to comply with other regulations. Proper planning for regulation compliance will allow water treatment plants to better budget their finances for future upgrades.

Comment: 128 Provide for severe penalties and protections for citizen residents or property owners water wells are contaminated. Craft legislation such that these companies are forced to pay all costs for repair, replacement or even purchase of properties whose value is diminished by damage to water wells.

Response: We understand your concerns. Many variables come into play when a well is contaminated. Proper regulation will prevent well contamination from TDS discharges.

Comment: 129 Be more restrictive regarding the erosion, runoff, etc. from logging operations, construction, highway building, etc. In my opinion, we are presently too lenient in these areas. The loggers seem to be operating "unchecked".

Response: Thank you for the comment, this regulation does not focus on loggers, the main focus is on oil and gas companies.

Comment: 130 We need to be encouraging the development of clean, SUSTAINABLE energy sources, not another fossil fuel that will eventually be used up. In addition, natural gas still produces greenhouse gases. While less greenhouse gas is better, none is best.

Response: Thank you for the concerns, inevitably natural gas has been extracted from the earth and will continue to be extracted for years to come while continued regulation has helped sustain the environment we have today. Non fossil fuel development is on the rise but can not sustain energy needs alone at this time.

Comment: 131 The natural gas industry does a very good job of pretending to care about the environment. If they care so much, why don't they wait until we know all of the environmental impacts before proceeding with drilling?

Response: Preliminary environmental impact studies have been done. The EPA is doing further analysis on fracwater impact with the environment.

Comment: 132 Do the environmental impact studies first to determine impact on people, property, traffic, pressure on infrastructure, water quality.

Response: Preliminary environmental impact studies have been done. Impact on people, property, traffic, pressure on infrastructure, and water quality has been considered during Regulation development.

Comment: 133 We are dismayed that the Water Resources Advisory Committee (WRAC) would consider further delaying the implementation of these rules by suggesting that a group of state-wide stakeholders develop appropriate solutions in lieu of rule-making. Past experience demonstrates that strong enforceable rules are the most effective way to cut pollution.

Response: The Regulations will be enforceable. Additional research is not discouraged as numerous solutions to common problems could be discovered and new technologies invented.

Comment: 134 Does DEP intent to call for a comprehensive proposal addressing other environmental concerns associated with TDS reduction, such as energy consumption, air emissions, residual solid waste generation, landfill capacity, and disposal costs.

Response: New technologies are being developed that treat this wastewater without using large amounts of energy or emitting large quantities of air pollutants, and the Department believes that this regulation will continue to move the industry in that direction. In fact, the Department believes that the certainty provided by this rule will accelerate the development of more efficient treatment technologies, zero discharge technologies and also drive conservation and pollution prevention through reuse of the wastewater. This industry will generate the residual solids as suggested. The Department continues to work with treatment technology providers to develop reusable end products from these materials to reduce waste and costs associated with this treatment.

Comment: 135 Water withdrawal permitting must be monitored.
